Israeli Settlers Fear a 'Revolution' Labor Vow on Autonomy Raises Doubts for Future

By David Hoffman

Washington Pact Service

KIRYAT ARBA, Israeli-Occupied West Bank — In the window of his tiny pizzeria, Yirzhak Tzarfati displays a picture of the late Israeli prime minister, Menachem Begin, a symbol of Zionist zeal for many residents of this Jewish settlement nestled in the

But the voices inside the pizza shop Thursday echoed with anxiety and worry in the aftermath of the election victory of the Labor Party leader, Yitzhak Rahin.

Mr. Rabin's pledge to curtail expansion of settlements in the territories and move swiftly toward an autonomy agreement for 1.7 million Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza has unsettled many residents of Kiryat Arba — and touched off new protests from acrivists in the settler movement. The activists said they hoped to frustrate Mr. Rabin's plans to reach an autonomy agreement with the Palestinians in six months, stepping up the pace of settlement before Mr. Rabin forms his government and staging demonstrations against a pact. In the recent past, some of the more militant activists have

"What is this autonomy? Nobody has explained it to us," said Mr. Tzarfati, 50. "From all these descriptions we don't know

Some say we'll be kicked out," he said, "Some say we'll be slaughtered. Let someone stand up and explain it to us." This confusion, and an undercurrent of fear about the future, ran through interviews with many of those who visited Mr. Tzarfati's shop in Kiryat Arba, a settlement of 5,000 people. According to election returns, the settlement cast a strong vote for Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of the Likud party in the

Mr. Rahin has said he would like to move within six months to an agreement for "real" autonomy for the Palestinians, while reserving defense and foreign policy functions for Israel and stopping short of an independent state.

Many residents here said they worried about what the practical impact of autonomy would be for settlers — such as whether there would be a Palestinian police force.

"It's not comfortable, it's not pleasant, this revolution." said Uzi Bettel, 30, who tends the settlement's gas station, referring to the Rahin victory, "Everyone was down and depressed when they heard the results of the election. When we need to protest, we wi - within the law."

"Autonomy is not a simple thing," said Naomi Wasserman, 31, a teacher who worked for Likud during the campaign. "Rahin will do it, but it will take time. There will be a lot of protests."

Some residents took comfort from the largely successful effort in recent years to expand settlements in the territories, which now house about 110,000 Jewish settlers. Others took comfort in Mr. Rabin's reputation as a hard-liner, and his comment this week that no settlement would be uprooted, as was Yamit in the Sinai after the Camp David accords of 1978.

But many acknowledged that a new chapter was opening in the long struggle over the territories. In the elections, one of the pioneering settler parties. Tehiya, failed to gain a single seat, and another nationalist party, Moledet, gained no new seats.

Elyakim Haetzni, a Tehiya member and one of the early settlers of Kiryat Arba, lost his seat in the Knesset, or parliament. In an interview Thursday, Mr. Haetzni said Israeli vnters had turned against ideology, including that of the rightist parties that captured so much attention in the Likud era.

The Tehiya was the most ideological party." he said. "We paid

Even in the settlements, he said, Tehiya had a poor showing. Kiryat Arha was first settled in 1968 and expanded under Labor-led governments. The older settlements that developed in this period have generally been defined by Mr. Rabin as "security" outposts that he would retain. But Mr. Rabin has said he ld curb expansion of "political" settlements erected by Likud in denser Arah population centers.

Mr. Haetzni said many settlers who fought Labor governments in the 1960s and 1970s became complacent during "the 15 fat

For Delors, More Tenure, Less Power

By Tom Redburn International Herald Tribune

LISBON - Jacques Delors will be granted two more years as president of the EC Commission, but only after he is told that Brussels should no longer inter-vene so much in the affairs of the Community's 12 nations.

This is the most important outcome, officials and analysts say, that is likely to emerge from the two-day meeting of EC leaders that opens here Friday.

On Thursday, Britain became the last of the EC governments to agree formally to extend Mr. Delors' tenure. It thus joins its 11 pertners in endorsing the man who not only stands as the most visible champion of the drive for European unity, but also serves as the lightning rod for growing discontent over the degree of power to be exercised in Brussels.

"We do not want a centralized executive in Brussels which tries to insert its. tentacles into the nooks and crannies of national life," said Douglas Hurd, Britain's foreign secretary, in a recent state-ment outlining London's thinking on the ized Community in which decisions are taken as close as possible to the people," Britain once stood largely alone in resisting the transfer of power to Brussels. Ironically, analysts say, the new emphasis on curhing the power of Brussels may end up enhancing rather than imped-ing the drive for European integration.

What Delors understands is that hy cutting back oil unnecessary actions by Brussels, you actually lay the groundwork for building a more powerful, integrated Community operating on a higher plane," said Stanley Crossick, director of the Belmont European Policy Center in Brussels.
"Indeed, only by spreading nower away future of the EC. "We need a decentral- from the center will the EC be able to get anything important accomplished on its new agenda."

Mr. Delors plans to present leaders in Lisbon with the EC Commission's ideas for narrowing the scope of its own influence. The still-vague proposal, which EC officials discussed at a meeting Thursday in Brussels, is in part designed to deflect some of the stronger attacks on the Community's executive agency. At the same time, the focus on "subsidiarity" — the EC term for the goal of operating at the lowest level of government possible -would help Mr. Delors rein in some of the

Compiled by Our Staff From Disparches LONDON - A Royal Navy warship boarded French fishing vessels Thursday after accusations that the French had cut through trawling gear and assaulted Eng-lish fishermen.

The incident occurred on the eve of a European Community summit meeting in Lisbon that will consider ways to repair the damage of a Danish vote against European unity in a referendum this month. The violence seemed yet another example of unneighborliness among countries seeking to be better neighbors. "The French have been burning our lambs, destroying our vegetables and now they seem to be fighting our fishermen," said David Clark, agriculture spokesman for the opposition Labor Party, referring to earlier incidents in which French farm-

We are dealing not just with economic but also with political cooperation and our com-mon will to end bloodshed in this basin," President Boris N. Yeltsin of Russia said at a news conference.

He dismissed calls by Eduard A. Shevardnadze, the Georgian leader, for an elaborate Black Sea organization that would establish collective security arrangements. "We don't want any more hureaucracies," Mr. Yeltsin said.

Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel, host of the meeting at a renovated Ottoman palace overlooking the Bosphorus, said such disputes did not have to block cooperation. He cited his own problems with Greece, a member of the group.

"The disputes of today may not be there tomorrow," the Turkish leader said, hailing the signing of the declaration as a historic day for Turkey and the Black Sea region.

The pact, covering a market of 400 million people, aims for cooperation in energy, trans-portation, communications, information and ecology, as well as the establishment of a joint

The financial strains arising from the former Soviet bloc's transition to a market economy and the lack of investment capital were expect-

Albania was accepted as a founding member, along with Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bulgaria, Georgia, Greece, Moldova, Romania, Russia, Turkey and Ukraine.

In speeches, leaders of the 11 countries acknowledged that ethnic and territorial conflicts clouded the prospects of economic cooperation. President Abulfaz Elchibey of Azerbaijan and the Armenian president, Levon Ter-Petro-

Mr. Shevardnadze, who survived a coup attempt on Wednesday by supporters of Zviad Ghamsakurdia, the deposed Tbilisi leader, said the Black Sea states should take collective action on security matters.

"We need security guarantees in a Black Sea region where the seeds of very dangerous misunderstandings are being sown," he stressed. Mr. Shevardnadze said the Black Sea Fleet, the object of intense rivalry between Russia, Ukraine and others, should be reduced and parceled out on a quota basis. "I think we should think about reducing the

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian Serbs have pledged to stop firing on nonmilitary targets in Sarajevo and to put their heavy weapons around the city under United Nations observation. a UN official said Thursday. Major General Lewis MacKenzie, the UN commander in Sarajevo, made the announcement of a promise of restraint by Serbian forces after a relatively quiet night in the Bosnian capital of 300,000 people, which has been besieged for nearly three months.

He said that the president of Bosnia-Herzegovina, Alija Izetbe-govic, a Muslim, had welcomed the Serbian announcement but was skeptical of the pledges being carried out, following the breakdown of many agreements in almost three months of fighting.

Meanwhile, there was no sign of progress Thursday in talks held in Strasbourg, France, on ending the ethnic lighting that has killed thou-sands of Serbs, Croatians and Muslims during the last year. The European Community me diator, Lord Carrington, said after the talks with leaders of the warring republics that his effort to revive an EC-sponsored peace process had een "disheartening." Lord Carrington held separate meetings with the Serbian president, Slobodan Milosevic; the Croatian president, Franjo Tudjman; and the Bosnian foreign minister, Haris Silaidzic. Lord Carrington said that Mr.

Milosevic had refused to recognize Bosnia-Herzegovina as a sovereign state and had rebuffed EC attempts to hold talks on the future of the Kosovo region of Serbia, where ethnic Albanians are demanding

"I think today was disheartening but we're going to go on trying, Lord Carrington said at a news conference. "There has got to be a solution in the end."

There were these other developments Thursday: Soaring temperatures posed an increasing threat of epidemic porter for Sarajevo radio said. "It's getting hotter and hotter. So we are getting very afraid of an epidemic." • A UN spokesman said the Croatian Army was jeopardizing peacekeeping efforts in that former Yugoslav republic by attacking a Serbian-held region.

EC truce monitors in Croatia estimated that at least 150 people had been killed and 300 wounded in the last few days.

 Student protests in Belgrade demanding the removal of President Milosevic entered an 11th day and spread to the Serbian cities of Novi Sad, Kragujevac and Nis, news reports said.

Opposition to Mr. Milosevic has been growing since UN economic sanctions were imposed on Serbia on May 30 for its role in the ethnic war in Bosnia.

Fighting in Sarajevo had been particularly fierce up to Thursday, with scores of civilians killed or wounded in pitched battles between Serbian forces and the city's Muslim-led defenders.

"As a result of confrontations over the past few days, the Serbs have decided to unilaterally and unconditionally stop firing on nonmilitary targets," General Mac-Kenzie said. He added that they had pledged to place their heavy weapons under UN observation.

If the first step is successful, they will move artillery and mortars even further from the city," he said. "This is a significant commitment by the Serbs."

"If it fails because of their action," the general added, "it will be a very serious setback to Serbian credibility. General MacKenzie said he hoped that firing on nonmilitary targets would stop immediately. He added it that it would take two to three days to put Serbian heavy weapons under UN supervision.

Allowing UN peacekeepers to monitor Serbian heavy weapons in the hills around Sarajevo is a precondition for reopening the city's airport for humanitarian relief

Underlying the sense of urgency is a terror of a potential replay of the reprisals reported in the Croatian city of Vukovar last November, when Serbs captured the town after an 86-day siege. Gunmen went from house to house, pulling men, women and children from basements and shooting them. Already, fears of starvation haunt many families. With each day, supplies of food dwindle and the prices of what remains on the market go higher, with some goods costing 10 times more than they did before the siege. Many families must venture into the streets during the bombardments to hunt for fresh supplies. On Monday, when 19 civilians were killed and more than 100 wounded in one of the heaviest Serbian bombardments yet, some of the victims were out looking for bread and other food when they were hit

In the hospitals, some of which have been struck repeatedly by artillery and rocket fire, doctors and nurses do their own kind of foraging, searching for the medicines they need to keep the wounded and sick alive. Makeshift solutions like cutting bedsheets into bandages have become commonplace.

Backing for Paris AIDS Claim

Ex-Official Says Gallo Misled Washington on Research

By Philip J. Hilts New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - A former senior health official says the U.S. government was misled by Dr. Robert Gallo's claim to have been the sole discoverer of the cause of AIDS, and that now the United States has a "moral duty" to turn over the credit and the royalties to the French.

Comments by C. McClain Haddow, the former official, in recent interviews are part of the increasing pressure being put on the government to re-verse its stand behind Dr. Gallo.

At the same time, lawyers for the Pasteur Institute in Paris are lobbying officials of the White House and Department of Health and Human Services. And two independent bodies have at tacked Dr. Gallo and what they said was the government's limp investigation. Had we known then what we know today, we would have had a moral obligation to allow the French to have all the royalties," said Mr. Haddow, chief of staff at the Department of Health and Human Services from 1983 to 1987, "We have no right to them."

He said that senior department officials doubted Dr. Gallo's version of events and were aware that, despite his vehement denials, his laboratory had worked with a virus sent to him by the French.

Mr. Haddow's comments were corroborated by an official who worked for him at the department and was present in some of the meetings at the height of the controversy: Mary Martin, now special assistant to the head of the department's Office of Civil Rights.

In addition, some notes of attorneys for the department in 1985, when negotiations with the Prench were taking place, refer to concerns about losing any court case.

If it had been known then that Dr. Gallo had used the French virus for a significant part of his work, that might have prevented him from claiming credit for the discoveries leading to the creation of a blood test to detect the virus in patients.

But Joseph Onek, attorney for Dr. Gallo, said Wednesday that he did not believe Mr. Haddow was a credible source of information because he was convicted six years ago of a conflict of interest while working at the Department of Health and Human Services and served four months in prison. He nonetheless has been questioned in the last two weeks by investigators looking into the case. At the same time, the Pasteur Institute is lobbying the U.S. government to turn over the royalties for the AIDS blood test to French scientists. The French laboratory has asked the government to surrender all of the estimated $50 million in past and future royalties from the blood test. The royalties are now split between the two governments, with about $100,000 a year going to Dr. Gallo and

The panel of experts, headed by Dr. Frederic Richards of Yale University, went on to say that Dr. Gallo's behavior "constitutes intellectual reckessness of a high degree - in essence, intellectual appropriation of the French viral isolate."

Dr. Gallo's lawyer called the charges "ludicrous." He said that, if Dr. Gallo is charged with "intellectual appropriation" for not giving credit to the French in his papers, then the French, too, are guilty, because they did not mention in their papers that Dr. Gallo helped them learn how to grow the virus as well.

The House subcommittee on oversight and instigations, headed by Representative John D. Dingell, Democrat of Michigan, also issued a critique of the finding by the Office of Scientific

It stated that the finding was "deeply flawed" and that some of its conclusions were "flatly refuted by the evidence."

In Restive Region of Moldova

Truce Is Set

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispanches ISTANBUL — The presidents of Russia and Moldova agreed Thursday to an indefinite cease-fire in the Trans-Dniester region of Moldova and said a UN fact-finding mission would arrive by the end of the week. The agreement was reached after talks between Presidents Boris N. Yeltsin of Russia, Mircea I. Snegur of Moldova, Leonid M. Kravchuk of Ukraine and Ion Iliescu of Ro-

Mr. Snegur said the Moldovan parliament would consider grant-ing a high degree of home rule to Trans-Dniester, where ethnic Rus-sian and Ukrainian separatists have declared a republic.

He said the most important elements of the accord were the guarantees by Russia and Moldova, "personally made by the presi-dents, to preserve the cease-fire" that was declared Tuesday but not honored. "At the request of the government of Moldova, observers from the United Nations will arrive on a fact-finding mission at the end of this week," Mr. Snegur said.

The talks took place at the 11nation Black Sea Economic Summit in Istanbul.

Several hundred people died in a battle for the Dniester town of Bendery last week. Mr. Snegur said his country was at war with Russia and accused the Russian 14th Army of backing the separatists from its bases on the east bank of the river.

Two Moldovan military helicopters were reported shot down overnight Thursday by anti-aircraft forces in the Trans-Duiester region as fighting in eastern Moldova con-

Russian radio said the helicop-ters were downed by units of the Russian 14th Army following several overflights during the night by Moldovan helicopters and military aircraft. Interfax news agency, quoting the press center of the Trans-

Dniester government, said 14th Army units fired anti-aircraft rockets and apparently brought down two aircraft in the Bendery region. The 14th Army has said it remained neutral in the conflict in eastern Moldova, but Wednesday said it had monitored Trans-Dniester military aircraft overflights from Moldovan and Romanian ter-

Russian Army commanders have admitted that some of their officers may have taken part in the fighting without orders. Russians in Trans-Dniester oppose the government's moves toward unification with Romania.

Sporadic fighting continued in other parts of eastern Moldova. The authorities in Trans-Dniester ported two Cossack fighters killed, while officials in Kishinev, the Moldovan capital, said two Moldovan police officers were killed in the clashes.

Shuttle Starts Its Longest Flight Yet

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida (AP) - Columbia roared into space with seven astronauts Thursday on the longest U.S. shuttle flight yet, a 13-day mission that NASA hopes will lead to full-time stays in space. The 100-ton spaceship took off at 12:12 P.M., after a five-minute delay.

During their flight, the astronants will grow crystals, study drops of fluid, set fires in sealed chambers and undergo medical tests to provide more data on how humans fare in weightlessness and withstand the stresses of gravity upon return.

The longest previous American shuttle flight was 10 days and 21 hours, by Columbia in 1990. The U.S. record — 84 days — belongs to the third and final Skylab mission, in 1973-74. The duration record is held by the

T STREET, SE ELPOTE ILL TARE LA

WASHINGTON - Is this the needle that bursts the Perot bubble? Can the undeclared independent candidate keep his remarkable drive toward the White House on course amid a storm of charges that his agents have spied on President George Bush, members of the president's family and even his own children?

Those questions have become the talk of political Washington. Republicans and Democrats alike are chattering about "Inspector Perot" and his comenppance, although they picture the Dallas billionaire-turned-populistolitician as a more sinister figure than Peter

Few politicians, here or elsewhere, believe that the damage to Mr. Perot is fatal, at least so far, but one thing is evident: For the first time, he has been forced onto the defensive. His television, in a full-scale news conference, on "Larry King Live," the widely watched television call-in program on CNN.

He scored points in his counterattack on the NBC television program "Today," politicians said, especially by displaying a copy of a senti-mental letter from Mr. Bush thanking him for concern about the Bush family. But most of his 40 minutes of precious national airtime was spent playing defense, when what he likes to do is spray accusations at Washington insiders.

"I thought he cut Bush badly with that let-

"But on balance, he's hurt as much as Bush. Meanwhile, Clinton gets a chance to talk issues while they're staging a Texas shoot-out. Our guy's not exactly the darling of the voters, but if they keep at this, he may be the only one left standing, which is probably the only way that he can win this."

What the Perot forces fear is that an unflattering image of their man is taking hold — an image as "a secretive computer salesman with a penchant for skulduggery," to use the phrase of Bob Martinez, the former governor of Florida who is now Mr. Bush's point man in the camTo escape the trap, Mr. Perot is following a three-pronged strategy:

First, he is denying everything, which, as Mr. Bartels noted, offers a hostage to fortune: If he is caught lying, his image as the straight-shooting cowboy determined to drive the cheats and hars out of town will be ruined.

Second, he is equating mainstream politi-cians with the news media that have been printing the charges, "putting 'em all in the same bag," as George C. Wallace used to say, and hlaming the mess in Washington on all of them.

Third, he has been hlaming the attacks on "Republican dirty tricks," in an obvious attempt to evoke memories of the Watergate break-in, whose 20th anniversary has put it back in the news lately. Mr. Bond freely admits that Republican campaign workers have given reporters information damaging to Mr. Perot, but he denied in an interview that such conduct constituted "dirty tricks." Much will depend on whether there is more to come. Clearly, the White House takes the Texan seriously enough to mount a concerted and continuing offensive.

The atmosphere has changed. For weeks. egations about Mr. Perot's business practices and behind-the-scenes political operations were printed and hroadcast daily, and no one paid. attention. Now the stories are taking hold.

A TV Slugfest Over 'Dirty Tricks' 'Do You Have a Shred of Proof?' Republican Asks Perot

Following are excerpts of the ex-tange between the Republican National chairman, Rich Bond, and Ross Perot during the call-in seg-ment of CNN's "Larry King Live." They argued Wednesday over Mr.

Perot's accusations that Republican "dirty tricks" were behind negative news reports about the likely indendent presidential candidate.

Mr. Bond: "You have made some very wild and unsubstantiated charges about dirty tricks by the Republican Party over the last couple of months. Now, these charges are simply untrue, they are fiction and they are fantasy and I want to ask you directly tonight . . . do you have one shred of evidence or any proof right now to back up your allegations of dirty tricks?"

Mr. Perot: "I can spend until midnight, but I'm not going to do what you want done on your terms. I'll do it on my terms when I think it best serves my purposes. New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — In a report to Congress on Thursday, Law-rence E. Walsh, the Iran-contra rence E. Walsh, the Iran-contra prosecutor, said his inquiry sought to determine whether Reagan ad-ministration officials "at the high-est level of government" had en-gaged in wrongdoing. Mr. Walsh left open the possibility of addi-tional indictments.

Coming nine days after the per-jury indictment of Caspar W. Weinberger, the former defense secretary, the prosecutor's third in-terim report to Congress seemed to be an effort to rebut Republican lawmakers who have criticized the length and expense of the investiga-tion. It has cost $31.4 million and began in December 1986.

"We are attempting to determine whether officials at the highest level of government, acting individ-ually or in concert, sought to ob-struct official inquiries into the Iran initiative," said Mr. Walsh.

Specifically, he said, he is trying to learn whether top Reagan offi-cials concealed documents and hed during earlier inquiries about their knowledge of secret arms shipments to Iran through Israel in late ments to Iran unrough istact m fate 1985. As the affair unraveled a year later, some Reagan sides feared the deliveries violated arms export control laws and and might expose the president to impeachment.

The perjury charges against Mr.
Weinberger, in which he was accused of lying to Congress about his knowledge of the shipments, stemmed from the investigation of the 1985 arms shipments, the prosecutor said. Although he did not rule out further indictments, Mr. Walsh said nothing about who wish said nothing about who might charged. He predicted that the inquiry would conclude by summer's end. The continuing investigation has developed new and disturbing evidence that made it necessary to re-interview many of the witnesses first questioned in 1987," the prosecutor said in the report. "This was not merely a cleanup chore - it has provided a significant shift in our understanding of which administration officials had knowledge of Iran-contra, who participated in its cover-up, and which areas required far more scrutiny," he added.

On Proliferation Law, a Disgraceful Failure

By John Glenn

The writer is a Democratic senator from Ohio and author of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Act, which seeks to restrict U.S. exports of plutonium, enriched uranium and enriched uranium-generating facilities.

risk of its getting one. The Pressler amendment also stated that such a cutoff would mean "no military equipment or technology shall be sold or transferred to Pakistan."

What does the record show about the Bush and Reagan commitment to nonproliferation in this case?

In 1981, when U.S. aid began to flow, Pakistan had oot produced bomb-grade nuclear material, nor had it manufactured bomb components or repeatedly violated U.S. nu-clear export control laws and those of U.S. allies. All these provocations occurred at the time of maximum U.S. assistance and continued after enactment of the Pressler amendment. Did Pakistan suffer an aid cutoff as required by the amendment? No. The deliveries of F-16s and other equip-ment continued. President Reagan continued to certify annually that Pakistan did not "possess" a nuclear de-vice and (despite all the evidence to the contrary) that continued U.S. assistance would reduce the risk of such possession — this although India had concluded by 1987 that Pakistan had the ability to assemble such a device easily and quickly.

Four years ago, reports were circulating that high-level analysts in U.S. intelligence agencies could not support another presidential certification of aid for Pakistan. Yet in October 1989, President Bush again certified that Pakistan did not possess a nuclear explosive device and that U.S. aid was "reducing incentives and creating disincentives" for acquisition of nuclear explosives.

This disgraceful policy failure ap-peared to have ended in October 1990, when Mr. Bush finally admitted what had become evident: The president could not certify that the Pakistanis did not have the bomb, and that was tantamount to saying they had it. And nine years of U.S. assistance had helped Pakistan release funds for its nuclear weapons program and given it the means for delivering the weapons.

Shockingly, testimony by Secre-tary of State James Baker this year

revealed that the administration has continued to allow Pakistan to purchase munitions through commercial transactions, despite the explicit, unambiguous intent of Congress that "no military equipment or technology shall be sold or transferred to Pakistan." These sales may have in-chided spare parts for F-16 aircraft. These facts alone would be enough to destroy any credibility possessed by this administration and the previous one on the issue of ouclear nonproliferation. Unfortunately, there is more (the details are beyond the scope of this article), including a failure to apply the Glenn-Symington amendment to Turkey despite that country's involvement in helping Pakistan acquire sensitive equipment for enriching uranium.

The Reagan and Bush administrations have practiced a nuclear nonproliferation policy bordering on lawlessness. They have undermined the respect of other countries for U.S. law and have done great damage to the nuclear nonproliferation effort.

Keep this in mind the next time someone in the administration extols the need for military action to deal with some power-hungry dictator seeking to acquire nuclear weapons.

Israel Didn't Face the Biggest Issue

T ERUSALEM - In Israel's elec-J tion campaigning, none of the parties made an issue, even a small issue, of the main threat to the country: the nonconventional, and particularly the nuclear, weapons development programs of Israel's enemies and potential enemies. Some in the Israeli military have warned of the danger posed by the nuclear programs of Iran, Iraq and Algeria. While the Gulf War has temporarily curbed Iraq's nuclear program, Iran is said to he less than a decade away from the bomb. It reportedly is hiring former Soviet miclear weapons scientists.

Algeria, whose government is under threat from a powerful Muslim fundamentalist movement, is said to he closest among the Muslim states (apart from Pakistan) to achieving nuclear capability. Israel's political leaders have failed publicly to address the problem. There was logic to this silence. Sounding the knell of nuclear disaster was unlikely to win votes. And neither major party has a solution. Iran, Iraq, Libya and the funda-mentalists in Algeria make no bones about regarding Israel as Sa-tan incarnate. Nor do they hide their desire to see Israel destroyed. The Islamic extremists of Iran and Algeria and the megalomaniacs of Iraq and Libva will seek Israel's destruction whether or not Israel annexes the West Bank and the Gaza Strip or rules and oppresses question of the state's size or policies: It is a question of its very presence in the Arab heartland. Few Israelis believe Arab and Muslim claims that their nuclear programs are peace-oriented. Every Israeli (and Arab) knows that if and when these countries obtain nuclear weapons, Israel will be in mortal danger. Israel is too small and its population too concentrated to stirvive a nuclear strike.

Syria's stated policy of attaining "strategic parity" with Israel — which is reported to have dozens of atomic bombs - must lead to achieving a credible nuclear option.

Iran's nuclear ambitions may largely have been triggered by the Iraqi threat, but once Iran has nuclear weapons there is every reason to believe that they will be directed against the Zionist "Satan."

Even without war, Israel would be imperiled by Muslim nuclear weapons. Nuclear weapons in enemy hands would undermine Israeli life and morale: Jews would stop emigrating to Israel, Israelis would emigrate, and investors and loan guarantors would be deterred. The threat of Arab nuclear powers could intimidate the international community into ostracizing Israel.

The destruction of nuclear reactors and weapons plants - in actions such as the raid by the Israeli Air Force in Iraq in 1981 — is probably no longer feasible. There are problems of distance and plant dispersal, not to mention the immense political and military hazards of such operations.

The solution to the problem lies, if it lies anywhere, in Washington, Bonn, London, Paris, Tokyo and perhaps Moscow. Only the West's deployment of economic, political and maybe even military threats and sanctions can block the Arab drive for nuclear weapons.

The avoidance of a nuclear war in the Middle East should he a major Western interest, irrespective of Israel. But the West's vigor and enthusiasm in pursuing this goal, in some degree, will be influenced by the type of government it has to deal with in Jerusalem.

Madame Governor, a Turkish Success

MUGIA, Turkey — In the towns and villages she visits, people show respect and deference. But sometimes they have trouble getting her title right. Out of habit and sheer strangeness of the new idea, Lale Aytaman is often called Vali Bey (Sir Governor) instead of Vali Hanim (Madame Governor). She laughs. It is the least of her problems as the first female governor of a Turkish province. Mugla was considered one of the most conservative, but it is visibly beginning to prosper, with sturdy houses sprouting through the countryside and an impressive power grid.

Mrs. Aytaman, 48, is a vastly energetic professor who never imagined that she would run anything, let alone a province, but finds she is loving it and having no trouble with prejudice in this Muslim country. Legally secular since the Ataturk revolution, Turkey nonetheless has a growing fundamentalist move-ment. And there is a palpable nostalgia of pride and sentiment for the great days of the Ottoman Empire, which is oot so different from memories of past glory that stir funda-mentalists in Arab lands. But Mrs. Aytaman's position and success are a sign of the times. Other women are emerging to run things in business, academia, public life. Women's rights were established in the constitution in 1923, "but with custom, politics and so on, it wasn't until now that they are getting real," she said. She finds she can get things done.

She exulted last week when she persuaded the legislature to approve a front with friends, she made a point of inspecting the local police station. She was saluted smartly and shown the clean, well-appointed rooms, though not the booking desk and the small cell next to it holding three men.

The policemen seemed pleased to see her. "They like me," she said. "I told them not to fix any more tickets or make exceptions for big shots, and if anyone complains, say gover-nor's order. People shouldn't be afraid of the police, they should have confidence in fairness.

Local bureaucrats in the ancient town of Milas, where she was not present, said they found it good to have a female boss because, as one put it: "Women care more about looking after things. They aren't greedy and ambitious for power." Turkey's 74 provincial governors are appointed, usually on a partisan basis. Thus, when the prime minister who named Mrs. Aytaman fell last winter, more than 50 of them were replaced, and she was expected to go, too. But there was a big campaign in the province, with meetings and petitions to keep her. "I told them don't do it for me, it makes no difference, I can always go back to the university. But do it for was proud of his mother, he stiffened: "It isn't up to the man to he proud, that's for the woman." Clearly he misses her, but he will he part of the new, accepting generation.

Turkey has an in-between place. It looks westward, eager for full involvement in the modern world, although coming reluctantly to ac-knowledge that its ambition to join the European Community will not soon be fulfilled; and it looks eastward, particularly to the Turkic-speaking republics of Central Asia eeking their way after communism. It hopes to be a model for them.

It is coming to see that the equality of women and use of their talents and capacities is an essential element in political as well as economic development. The education of women has already been demonstrated as the key to muffling the population explosion, which guarantees that so many poor countries stay poor.

Lale Aytaman is a first in her position, but she is determined not to be an exception. The way she goes about it makes it likely that others will soon be able to follow. She admits she was awed and scared when she was first appointed. "I didn't know anything about administra-tion, but I didn't know how strong I was." She laughs again. There is good news, too, in the world.

B OSTON — In the United States, government officials cannot stop anyone from speaking, or punish him afterward, because they distike his political message. That basic understanding of the First Amendment has just been reaffirmed by the Supreme Court in the St. Paul, Minnesota cross-burning case.

But the principle has not helped Brett Kimberlin. A federal prison inmate, he has been silenced and repeatedly punished for wanting to tell the world that he sold mariuana to Dan Quayle. It is nearly four years now since

Mr. Kimberlin first tried to talk to the press about his charge. What was done to silence him has been reported from time to time. But by delay and obfuscation, the Bush administration has managed so far to avoid real public focus on what by all signs was an outrageous, politcal abuse of power. Mr. Kimberlin was scheduled to talk to the press on Nov. 4, 1988, four days before the election, at a conference arranged by anthorities at the federal prison in Oklahoma where he was then held. Regulations permitted such meetings with the press. A top aide in the Bush-Quayle campaign, Mark Goodin, heard about the scheduled conference. He telephoned the Justice Department's director of public affairs, Loye Miller, to complain. Mr. Miller told higher Justice officials and the Bureau of Prisons. The director of the bureau, J. Michael Quinlan, ordered the press conference canceled. And at 11 that night he ordered Mr. Kimberlin confined in "the hole," a detention cell 4 feet by 6 feet (1.2 by 1.8 meters). Mr. Quinlan said that he isolated

Mr. Kimberlin to protect him from reported threats. It is now acknowledged that there were no such threats. On Nov. 7, the eve of the election, Mr. Kimberlin arranged to telephon reporters. An hour before the call he was returned to "the hole."

On Dec. 22, 1988, Mr. Kimberlin was put in detention. That was after The Legal Times published an article about what had been done to him. Officials explained that he had violated telephone regulations, but later he was found innocent of that charge. . .

A suit by Mr. Kimberlin against Mr. Quinlan and others could bring out the facts. GOTHENBURG, Sweden We are at last into the morning of the final game. Either Germany will continue its addiction to collecting major soccer trophies or Denmark will surprise everyone for the second time this week by winning the European championship, for its first major booor.

Baltic States Get UEFA Membership

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches GOTHENBURG, Sweden - The Baloc states of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia received full membership Wednesday in UEFA on condition that FIFA, soccer's world governing body, ratify these associations later this year. FIFA is expected to grant them full membership at its congress

The executive committee of UEFA, Europe's governing soccer body, also granted provisional membership to the soccer associations of Russia. Ukraine, Georgia, Croatia and Slovenia, UEFA decided last mooth to invite the three Baltie states and Croatia, Georgia, Slovenia and Ukraine to enter teams in next seasoo's Champions' Cup, Cup Winners' Cup and UEFA Cup competitions. But FIFA must first grant them full membership. • The Netherlands gained some scant consolation for its semifinal defeat by winning the tournament's fair play award Thursday.

producing a team of no personality Laudrup, told the press from his camp 320 kilometers (200 miles)

We talk to each other all the time. If Brian were a wife, I would marry him!"

Joking aside, it is a fact that Effenberg has just been sold to Fiorentina in Italy and, aware that Laudrup has no liking for Bayern Munich's new manager, Erich Ribbek, is trying to pull the Fiorentina purse strings to take his friend also.

"I told the president that if I was him. I wouldn't let the chance to buy Landrup go." said Effenberg. "I'm sure Fiorentina will find the $5 million for Landrup's transfer without too much difficulty.

No one who has seen the style with which Laudrup runs at defenses, or the rugged athleticism with which Effenberg carries out his oone-shall-pass duties, will suspect that friendship will dampen the competitive edge in the Ullevi Stadium on Friday night.

The play will be raw and hard and demanding because, despite Pele's observation that Germany is evolving with oew liberation, the Germans are battlers first, stylists second. And the Danes, as England, France and Germany have discovered, are more than prepared to match any opponent bruise for bruise in this event.

I do not suggest that is the first Danish intention. Far from it. Denmark deservedly upset the French and Dutch by raiding swiftly down the flanks, by using the speed and appetite of Povisen's front running and the quick, darting, clusive forays of Laudrup. Sadly for Denmark, its most athletie and consistent force down the left wing, Henrik Andersen, is out of the final. He would have missed it anyway, being the only man from either side to collect two yellow cards, but the knee injury for which he was flown by helicopter to Copenhagen threatens his career.

His absence will create an undoubted weakness on a team expected to line up like this: Peter Schmeichel; John Siveback, Lars Olsen and Kent Nielsen and Torben Piechnik; Kim Christofte, John Jensen, Henrik Larsen UEFA gave the Scottish Football Association a special award for the and Kim Villort; Brian Laudrup and Flemming Povlsen.

Denmark

Germany, with oo more injury losses after the first- and secondchoice captains, Lothar Matthans and Rudi Völler, dropped out, have ocither the traumas nor the inspiration that these marauding Danes draw from adversity. No German, for example, has had to leave camp to sign papers for a child to receive a bone marrow transplant, as Wilfort did a week ago for his 7-year-old daughter. Line, a leukemia victim.

The expectation that is Germany's own burden is heavily built on the diminutive, effervescent Thomas Hässler, who has flourished now that he no longer feels like the errand boy for Matthaus.

Similarly, Karl-Heinz Riedle has led the attacks with brio and enlarged confidence, using Jürgen game, Klinsmann as his bold foil the way the glo Hässler prompts the former GDR mark.

The winner? Of course, I think Germany. And I bope this night in Gothenburg proves me just as wrong as I, in common with Pelė and every other pundit, were in giving Denmark no chance against the Dutch:

Pelé: Midas and the Monster

Soccer's Greatest Star Also Made Money Paramount

By Ian Thomsen International Herald Tribiane

GOTHENBURG, Sweden Pele's son is a goalkeeper. He is the brought him to Santos from Bauru, No. 2 goalkeeper for the famous club where Pele used to play, Santos of Brazil. It is the wonderful irony afforded by sports, that a son should seek to prevent the same goals sought by his father.

"My son is upset because he doesn't play," Pele said Thursday. "I said to him, This is normal. You're 21. You will develop." Do you know why he complained? Because he didn't play, he didn't get a bonus. It is about money. You see his mentality. Then I must argue with him."

He told his son that he should not be concerned about the money. His concern should be to develop into a great goalkeeper. He should seek to play for the Brazilian national team. What does the money mean? Isn't this the lesson of his father's career?

"When I played, I had offers from Italy, Spain, Mexico," Pelè said. "I said. O.K., I make nice money playing for Santos, I make nice money playing for Brazil. I'm not going to transfer to some other place for a little bit more money. It s a different mentality today."

He was sitting on a peach and vanilla couch in the suite of an expensive hotel. A MasterCard banner hung from the wall behind him. He wore a blue blazer bearing a MasterCard patch. One of the dozen reporters seated around asked whether his son ever retorted that his own father should understand, having attached himself to something as lucrative as Master-

"No, we don't talk about that," Pelé said. "Of course, as players, we have a short life. Players have 15 years to make their life. But I think on should have the same base. You can't always be commercial. You can't always think about the money. You need to have the bal-

He was seated now in the country where fame located him, Brazil was contesting the World Cup in Sweden, and the wandering spotlight caught one glance of Pelé and never blinked again. That was 34 years ago. He scored five goals in the final two games of Brazil's ready been a professional for two years. He was 17 years old.

"He was 14 when his father which by bus at that time was cight hours from Santos," said Dr. Julio Mazzei, who has coached and advised Pelé for 32 years. "That was the first time he had ever seen shoes. His mother said, My son is going to the big city, I won't have him dressed like this. His mother made for him two shirts and a pair of long trousers. When he came to Santos, he could not walk. When you don't wear shoes, your feet spread out. In the shoes he looked funny walking." He lived in the players' boarding house in Santos. He was paid $5 a month. He sent his mother $3 every month. At 16 he earned a place on the national team. During a warmup game in Brazil, he injured a knee and did oot return until the third match of the 1958 World Cup

"For our luck, he was injured nobody could spot him," Mazzei said. "Uotil the semifinal game of the World Cup, oo team had scored the first goal against us. Then, 15 minutes into the semifinal, France scored the first goal. Who grabbed the ball out of the net, plucked it under his arm, carried it to the center and started things going but this 17-year-old boy. He was telling the other players, how can we let this happen to us? He was the lead-er. Seventeen years old."

He is 51 now, and it is a cliche to say of such men that they still appear young enough to play, but m Pele's case it is true. There are players in the game today who look older than him. Only around the eyes has his youth been betrayed. He carries himself free of strain. In 23 years be never suffered a major

The game has suffered to replace. him. If the question is about great modern players, be struggles to name any. He likes the high consis-tent level of Frank Rijkaard's midfield play for the Netherlands. He enjoyed Lothar Marthaus, before a knee injury felled the German, and he mentioned Danish midfielder Brian Laudrup, perhaps because his performance in the semifinal upset of the Netherlands in the world championship. He had al- freshest in the memory.

"I think sometimes we look to replace one player with another," Pele said. "But we have only one Beethoven. You can't replace Beethoven. There are a lot of musicians, but Beethoven's Beethoven. There is one Michelangelo. Then, I used to say, there is one Pelé. You can't change that. I used to say that my father and mother closed the machine. You can make no more Pelés."

But he is wary, too, that the modern system — a system of his creation, in fact — does not allow space for great players. Perhaps the game can expect no more Pelés, butwhat happened to the Johan Cryuffs, the Michel Platinis? The. attacking, creative game of Pele's-era appealed to the corporations, which paid great sums to attach their products to the game. Pressured by money, coaches are now, fearful of goals that will cost themtheir jobs. Players move from team-to team, chasing higher salaries more fiercely than a loose ball.

Last year, Pelé suggested several. rules changes to FIFA, to spring the game from its defensive mal-aise. He would do away with defensive walls, pointing out that it is the attacker who is penalized by them -fouled on the edge of the penalty box, the game is stopped so that his one-on-one confrontation with the goalkeeper can be smothered by a scattered wall of 10 defenders. "I think the defender is better now than the forward," Pelé said." "The defender and the strategy of the defender is much better than before. You don't see forwards and. wings like you saw before. I think the forwards must learn better to kick the ball."

He shrugged. Why can they not learn? But there are no more Peles, seeking greatness at the rate of $5° per month. His own son is a goalkeeper, after all, born of a rich European Championship here is father, and still frustrated by more CAPITOL GAMES: Clarence was wrenching enough as the bearings unfolded. Now, in cooler blood, comes this book, coherently reassembling the Story of a Supreme Court pieces and adding dimension and analysis. The oews is no prettier than it was the first time - worse, in fact. But like a brimstone-ar stinks and tastes bad, and maybe we'll be better for taking it.

If you happened to be in a sensorydeprivation tank during that televised pajama-party-from-hell weekend last October, the sight of 14 white men, one black man and one black woman thrashing through the pain of centuries of sexual and racial politics became a Harpers Ferry for women, igniting anger over the whiteness and maleness of power and the trivializing of women's concerns. Yet there are moments in this book when the titanic and exhausting battle over the comination becomes almost peripheral to the ignoble spectacle of our civie machinery in motion. The authors' disgust between the covers seems to equal what voters are showing behind the voting-booth curtain. The title, "Capitol Games," signals to those who live mercifully outside the Beltway that, in case we'd forgotten, virtually anything -truth, fairness, humanity - can be tossed on the table as stakes in the great political game.

Phelps, who covers the Supreme Court for Newsday, had an early line on Hill's accusations and was subpocnaed when the Senate went bunting for leaks instead of looking to the mote in its own very blackened eye. "Capitol Games" pulls the threads together into an allegorical tapestry that might be titled "The (Un-surprising) Triumph of Political Tactics over Truth."

From the moment Thomas's name first landed via fax machine in the office of then-White House Chief of Staff John Summe to the post-confirmation hoopla on the White House lawn (staged the day after the chief justice's wife died), the book scrutinizes the White House and those 14 white men of the Senate Judiciary Committee, the satellite political groups, the staffs, motives, factions, fears - and Thomas and Hill themselves.

In a day-by-day and sometimes hourby-hour deconstruction of the public and private jockeying, Phelps and Winternitz indict equally the White House and the Senate committee.

They take the Republicans to task for smarmy ruthlessness, for their willing-ness to use race to their advantage with Thomas, as they had with Willie Horton. The Democrats are pilloried for their fumbling hesitancy and personal vulnerabilities (there sat Teddy Kennedy, a potted plant on the panel, hamstrung by his personal scandals).

Thomas is quoted as telling William Gates, who had his own difficulties getting confirmed as CIA chief: "My motto is, 'Don't get mad, don't get even, get confirmed.'"

O NE of the most dramatic deals of the qualifying stage of the Pan-American Team Championships in Corpus Christi, Texas is shown in the diagramed deal. It occurred when Marcelo Branco and Gabriel Chagas of Brazil sat North and South.

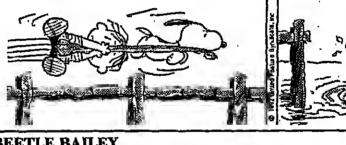

Chagas decided the South hand was too strong for a jump to four hearts over a three-diamond opening. He made a take-out double, intending to bid his suit next, but did oot forsee that be would have to do so at the seven-level. East's double of seven hearts was probably intended as a request for a spade lead. West obeyed orders by leading the spade queen, but that was fatal. South was able to ruff, maneuver a diamond ruff and cross to the club king. He then drew trumps and eventually took a winning club finesse against the queen; knowing that most of the missing clubs were on his left.

A trump lead would have beaten the contract, and the opposing team would have gained 17 imps since the contract in the replay was six hearts. As it was Brazil gained 14.

North and South were vulnerable. The bldding: East Dbl. Dbl. Pass Pass Pass Pass West led the spade queen.

year, 65-meet winning streak with a orld record of 8.95 meters (29 feet, 41/2 inches) at the 1991 World Championships, beat him for the second straight time Wednesday night.

Powell leaped 28-3½, the best in the world this year, on his third attempt, then passed on his final three jumps. Lewis settled for secand at 8.53 meters, the 65th time he has reached that distance. But that put Lewis on the Olympic team, giving him the opportuni-ty to become the first three-time ong jump gold medalist in the Games history.

It also made up failing to make the team at 100 meters and losing a chance for a third straight gold in that event. Lewis finished sixth in the 100 last Saturday.

Reynolds, the suspended world record bolder at 400 meters, finished second in his semifinal heat. Quincy Watts, the NCAA champion from Southern California, won in 43.97 seconds, the fastest time since the 1988 Olympics and matching the sixth-best ever. Reynolds' time of 44.14, a tie for 16thbest in history and third-fastest in the world this year, was much faster than that of Danny Everett, the 1988 Olympic brouze medalist, who won the other semifinal in 44.69. Steve Lewis, the 1988 Olympic champion, followed Everett in 44.77, while 1991 world champion Antonio Pettigrew finished fifth and failed to get to the final. Reynolds was suspended for two years by the International Amateur Athletic Federation after testing positive for steroids in August 1990. His suspension expires Ang. 11, two days after the Olympics.

· If Reynolds does qualify for the team, the U.S. Olympic Committee said Wednesday night that is considering submitting his name for the team along with the Supreme Court order allowing him to com-pete at the trials....

Previously, the USOC said it could not name Reynolds to the team because its constitution forbids certifying ineligible athletes.

McEnroe Outlasts Cash, Courier and Agassi Gain

WIMBLEDON, England John McEnroe won a tension-filled battle of former champions with Pat Cash in a five-set match Thursday that produced heroic tennis and high drama.

McEnroe, a three-time Wimbledon champion, lost a pair of tie-breakers but rallied to defeat Cash, the 1987 champion, 6-7 (3-7), 6-4, 6-7 (1-7), 6-3, 6-2, before a reverent Centre Court crowd.

Though McEnroe is 33 and Cash only a part-time player, the dno frolicked like hyperactive teenagers —diving after balls, sprinting after lobs and slamming aces and win-

The two unseeded players also threw rackets, screamed at them-selves and questioned calls throughout the four-hour match that added a needed touch of drama to a tournament that has produced few upsets so far.

Most seeds continued their steady, though unspectacular, progress on Thursday.

The top seed, Jim Courier, who has not lost a set since the quarterfinals of the French Open earlier this month, defeated Byron Black, 6-4, 6-1, 6-4,

Andre Agassi, the 12th seed, needed a set to get comfortable against Eduardo Masso before romping to a 4-6, 6-1, 6-3, 6-3 vic-

Other players advancing included ninth-seeded Guy Forget and 14th-seeded Wayne Ferreira. For-eliminate Anders Jarryd, 4-6, 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, 10-8, and Ferreira reached the third round with a 6-3, 6-3, 6-7 (3-7), 6-3 defeat of Christo van

Rensburg. But sixth-seeded Petr Korda was eliminated by Jakob Hlasek in a marathon match. Korda, who lost to Courier in the French Open final earlier this month, was defeated 4-6, 3-6, 6-3, 7-6 (9-7), 16-14 by Hla-sek in a match that lasted 4 hours, Jennifer Capriati won 17 of the first 19 points as she crushed Pam Shriver, 6-2, 6-4, in a Centre Court mismatch that was much more lopsided than the score indicated. Joining the sixth-seeded Caprian in the third round were defending champion Steffi Graf and ninetime champion Martina Navrati-

Graf, the second seed this year, breezed to a 6-1, 6-1 defeat of Mari-anne Werdel and has dropped only three games in two matches. Navratilova, seeded fourth, completed a 6-2, 3-6, 6-0 victory over Kimberly Po in a match that began

Wednesday. Also advancing were ninth-seed-Manuela Maleeva-Fragniere, 11th-seeded Jana Novotna, 13th-seeded Zina Garrison and 16thseeded Judith Wiesner. Conchita Martinez, the eighth seed but a poor grass-court player, 191st in the world Cash won the first tie-breaker, 7-3, and the second, 7-1, but he came unraveled in the final two sets as McEnroe produced hints of his old hrilliance while complaining about line calls. Capriati, 16, slammed winners from all over the court and tantalized her opponent with soft lobs. Shriver, who turns 30 next week, was overwhelmed by Capriati's shots and had little power on her own strokes. Shriver simply punched the ball back at times, rather than hitting full strokes.

At one point in the first set, Shriver yelled "Go Out!" as a Capriati lob sailed over her head — and then raised her arms in mock triumph when the ball went long.
"I think I played extremely well," Capriati said. "I even felt comfortable coming to the net."

While Shriver was embarrassed by a younger rival, Navratilova was rallying to defeat another member of the younger generation.

The match was tied at one set apiece when darkness suspended play Wednesday evening with Navratilova struggling. But she quickly took control Thursday to finish off McEnroe, who won his last a 6-2, 3-6, 6-0 victory.

NBA Draft: Very Good, Very Costly

PORTLAND, Oregon - In a National Basketball Association college draft laden with good players but loaded with potential booby traps, there were no sur-prises among the first four selections.

The Orlando Magic took Shaquille O'Neal, the 7-foot, 1-inch (2.18-meter) center from Louisiana State, on Wednesday night. Alonzo Mourning, the 6-10 Georgetown center, went to the Charlotte Hornets; Christian Laettner, the 6-10 Duke forward, to the Minnesota Timberwolves, and Jim Jackson, the 6-6 Ohio State swingman, to the Dallas Mavericks. Among NBA observers, it was nearly unanimous that those teams improved themselves significantly. So, apparently, did the New York Knicks, who acquired veteran shooting guard Rolando Blackman, 33, from Dal-las before the draft for their first-round draft pick in 1995. In another predraft deal, Utah traded forward Blue Edwards, guard Eric Mur-dock and the 23d pick of the first round Milwankee forward Larry Krystkowiak and guard Jay Humphries. "It's the deepest draft in years," said an NBA college scout, Marty Blake. "But you have better done your homework on some of these guys." Not to mention saved a few dollars to pay the escalating prices for these soonbe-millionaires. Orlando faces a daunting task in trying round. Center Oliver Miller went to to satisfy O'Neal, whose demands are Phoenix as the No. 22 pick. The Razor-year for a long-term deal.

LaPhonso Ellis of Notre Dame, whose stock rose during tryout camps, was selected by Denver as the No. 5 pick. Denver also had the 13th pick, used to select Bryant Stith, who played mostly forward at Virginia but is projected as a guard in the NBA. Tom Gugliatta of North Carolina State went to Washington at No. 6, followed by Walt Williams of Maryland to Sacramento as No. 7.

Adam Keefe of Stanford, projected to be chosen as early as No. 5, wound up the 10th choice, by Atlanta, Offensive-mind-ed Harold Miner of Southern Cal was Miami's selection at No. 12. UCLA's Tracy Murray and Don Mac-Lean slipped to 18th and 19th, Murray taken by San Antonio, MacLean by Detroit. Detroit then traded MacLean and William Bedford to the Los Angeles Clippers for Olden Polynice and the Clippers' second-round draft picks in 1996 and '97.

The Spurs' pick of Murray reportedly was called by Milwaukee, which is ex-pected to trade Dale Ellis to San Antonio for the rights to Murray next week. The Bucks had two other first-round picks and used both on players from Arkansas. They used the No. 8 selection to draft forward Todd Day and the No. 23 choice for guard Lee Mayberry. Arkansas became the fifth school to have three players chosen in the first round. Center Oliver Miller went to second round, Isaiah Morris, who was Miami's choice in the No. 37 spot.

Clarence Weatherspoon of Southern Mississippi went to Philadelphia as No. 9. At 6-7 and 240 pounds, Weatherspoon is considered as close as the 76ers could get to a wide body to replace Charles Barkley, who was traded to Phoenix last week.

"I'm excited about going to Philadel-phia and filling Barkley's shoes," Weather-spoon said. "That's going to be a big job." Robert Horry of Alabama was the No. 11 choice of Houston, Malik Scaly of St. John's was the No. 14 pick of Indiana. Anthony Peeler, who was placed on five years' probation for an assault conviction last week, was chosen by the Los Angeles Lakers in the No. 15 spot. Peeler was arrested again on assault charges Monday, but those charges were Randy Woods, a sharpshooting 6-foot guard from La Salle, was a surprisingly high choice at No. 16 by the Clippers. Doug Christie of Pepperdine was cho-sen by Seattle at No. 17. Hubert Davis of North Carolina went to New York at Barry, at No. 21. Golden State spurned a big man by passing Elmore Spencer of UNLV in favor of guard Latrell Sprewell of Alabama at No. 24. Spencer was picked up by the Clippers with the next selection.

No. 20. Boston chose Jon Barry of Geor-

Twins' Tapani Beats Angels on 2-Hitter

Kevin Tapani insists nothing has anged for him even if his statistics suggest otherwise. Tapani, who lost four of his first five decisions, threw a 2-hit, 10strikeout complete game in Minneapolis on Wednesday night to beat the California Angels, 11-0.

"It's the same stuff," he said, "but I'm getting a little better results. I'm not doing anything different than when I was going bad. The balls are just going at people now."

The 10 strikeouts were a career high for Tapani, who pitched his first complete game of the season. He had reached the seventh inning just once in his last six starts. He gave up a ground single to Rene Gonzales with two out in the first, then retired 18 straight before Junior Felix doubled with two out in the seventh. The only other Angel to reach base was Lee Stevens, on Ta-

OBSERVER A Rap on Dumping

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK -- Now that Gov-ernor Clinton has dumped Jesse Jackson, President Bush may have to dump Dan Quayle. This has nothing to do with the vice president's inability to spell "potato." George Washington was a terrible speller too, but a pretty good president nevertheless.

On the other hand, Bush needs a esture that will make millions see him as decisive and politically courageous. Clinton showed the way by dumping Jackson in the now famous dust-up about Sister Souljah.

By deliberately embarrassing Jackson, Clinton was declaring independence from an important branch of his party which has made insistent claims upon recent Democratic nominees. With this stroke, we are told, Clinton has either (1) thrown away the hlack vote which is part of his party's "core" strength, or (2) won the hearts of both working-class whites and family-oriented blacks who don't hold with Sister Souljah's apocalyptic vision of interra-

What's remarkable is that, whereas Clinton's campaign last week was as silent as the grave where it seemed at rest, there is now almost as much talk about Clinton as about Ross Perot.

This raises the question whether Perot may now have to dump somebody, especially if Bush seizes the courage-and-independence initiative by dumping Quayle. It's hard to think of somebody Perot could dump with any chance of making a splash as loud as you get hy dumping a Jackson or a Quayle.

He reaped a two-day media uproar recently by hiring Democrat Hamilton Jordan and Republican Ed Rollins as deputy masterminds for his campaign, but these are not the kind of people whose dumping amazes all humanity. I'd guess that Ross Perot will have to dump him-self if he wants to keep up with competitors who have the likes of Jesse Jackson and Dan Quayle ripe for the dumping. Still, one never knows how these things will cut. Dumping himself might set off such a demand for Perot for president that the election would be a mere formality. On the other hand, a lot of people might think that dumping himself showed Perot lacked the famous "fire in the belly" without which, political columnists insist, nobody is fit to be president. Which would be the end

In the meantime, back at the White House where Clinton's Jackson dumping is being watched with, we can assume, the usual total confusion, what might a less than totally confused White House be thinking?

First, it might be struck by the strong parallels between Messrs. Jackson and Quayle. Each represents a faction within the sents a faction within his party which is highly suspect among mid-dle-of-the-road folk.

Jackson represents Democratic liberalism, now denounced by conservatives as "ultra-leftists," "leftliberals," "arch-liberals" and, by whatever name, the source of all troubles since the Fall. Quayle is the hero of the conservative right with a passion for ideological purity that makes the faithful despise Bush's pragmatism.

Neither crowd has much appeal for the bulk vote, the big middle-of-the-road crowd, which seems to be turned off by both parties but enchanted with Perot, part of whose charm seems to be that he has no idcology whatever.

Logic might argue the case for a Quayle dumping by Bush. As with Clinton's Jackson dumping, it might suggest he is a fellow with the courage to assert his independence of contentious and insistent ideological factions and might revive public credibility in him as a candidate genuinely determined on change.

Dumping also has its dangers, of course. It can justly be said, for example, that Clinton has now played the race card in a calculated effort to win white working-class Democrats back from the Republicans. Sister Souljah made it easy for him, however, with her overwrought rap chants and off-thecuff oratory extolling bloodsbed.

Her art exploits a black rage about American racism which is surely justified. Whether commercial exploitation of it is justified de-pends on how you feel about throwing around kerosene when your house is on fire. After Jackson accepted her in his Rainbow Coalition, it was easy for Clinton to make him seem like a kerosene salesman.

Playing Santa Claus With a Heart of Ice

By Bernard Weinraub New York Times Service

OS ANGELES - Max Shreck, the villainous tycoon in "Batman Returns," would cut sleazy deals in a restaurant like Lucy's El Adobe. Dark. Anonymous. Nondescript. A Barry Manilow song crooning on the radio. Nestled on the unfancy eastern side of Melrose Avenue near Paramount Studios.

Christopher Walken enters to an enthusiastic welcome by the two waitresses. The actor, who portrays Shreck and is in Los Angeles to promote the movie, grins broadly as he strolls into the back room of his favorite L.A. restaurant. The food is zesty, the prices cheap and the cheerfully no-nonsense style reminds him of Queens, the New York City borough that nurtured him, the borough whose accent lingers heavily in his voice.
In Hollywood, Walken is viewed as a skilled, untemper nental New York actor who has never quite reached stardom (despite an Academy Award), in part because of the eeric, ambiguous and sometimes quietly violent men that he portrays.

Although he lives in New York, Walken, 49, looks very much like a Hollywood actor: tall, tanned and lean with sunken eyes. He wears a loose-fitting Italian-style suit over a casual shirt. His hair is fashionably spiky, and he's wearing dark glasses. As the Machiavellian bad guy in "Batman Returns," Walken virtually chews up the scenery playing Gotham City's Santa Claus with a heart of ice.

"I like Max," Walken said. "I tend to play mostly villains and twisted people. Unsavory guys. I think it's my face, the way I look. If you do something effective, producers want you to do it again and again. I've been in show business so long. Maybe there's a strangeness connected to that. I mean I don't play lovers. I wish I did. At least once I'd like to have a crack at one of those guys. A heartbreaker. Some people are born to it. I'm not. I saw an interview with Walter Matthau, and he said he used to play the villain, and if you're not really handsome and not really homely, they give you the villain part. That applies to me."

The actor, at least publicly, doesn't quite live up to the image of the creepy roles he portrays. He jogs religiously, and in L.A. drivers honk their horns when they see him pushing along Sunset Boulevard. He's an accomplished cook, specializing in healthy foods, and he keeps very thin. But during the filming in Italy of "The Comfort of the quirky and sexually violent 1991 film, he gained 20 pounds (9 kilos) because of the ongoing buffet of pasta and sweets on the movie set.

The character in that film, Robert, got to me personally, and that's rare, he said. "Usually, I take off my costume and go home and that's it. In that movie I was a profoundly disturbed person. It's always more difficult when they're smart. He was a terrible man. That sex equals death in that movie scared me. He really bothered me. I was glad to say goodbye to Robert."

The customers in the restaurant are very cool about of the year, playing a power-starved industrialist in Gotham City who specializes in industrial waste and, worst of all, tosses Michelle Pfeiffer out the window of a high rise. In the movie, Walken wears an outrageous wig, some fancy costumes and struts around, harking with a New York accent that reminds more than a few filmgoers of Donald Trump, "I've heard that," Walken said. "Other people say that I speak like him. Well, we both come from Queens. It's true in most movies I don't use my own voice.

Walken, even though he has a leading role in the biggest film

"I tend to play mostly villains and twisted people," Christopher Walken says. "Unsavory guys."

I'm always from somewhere. Gotham City is really New York. I was born there. So I used my own voice.

That's it. I never thought about Donald Trump. I thought about the big show business mogals I read about. Soi Hurok. Sam Goldwyn. Those guys who fought their way to the top. And then I thought of a lawyer I know. An older guy. Real tough, Real New York. Real smart. You wouldn't want to cross this guy. I thought about him a lot in this part. He's one of those guys — too mean to die."

Walken is self-deprecating, self-assured but quite private. He picks his words carefully.

Although he doesn't put L.A. down he prefers New York, where he lives with his wife, Georgianne Walken, a casting director, in a West Side apartment. The Walkens, who met as dancers in a touring company of "West Side Story," have been married for 25 years. "People come up to me all the time in New York," he said. "Not for autographs. but to talk about movies, often in a very scientific way."

Walken says that the tribal rites of Hollywood still puzzle him. At the huge, glittering opening the other night of "Batman Returns," Walken arrived in a limousine hired by Warner Brothers. "I wore a tuxedo," he said, shaking his head. "I felt ridiculous. I was the only person in that entire place with a tuxedo. There were a lot of motorcycle jackets, A let of T-shirts, A lot of sporty clothes. I don't know. I felt like I was Robert Montgomery or somebody. At the party afterward, somebody came up to me and said, 'Gee, you sure look nice,' I felt like a jerk! In New York, I what to do."

His father, who is now retired, owned Walken's Bakery in Astoria, but it was his mother who thrust her son into show business, "In the 1950s television was being born, and there was this phenomenon, about 90 live shows from New York, so there were hundreds of kids from Queens, kids from hluecollar families, doing TV shows," he recalled. "By the time I was 7, I did walk-ons, catalogue modeling, you name it. In the Queens where I grew up, you didn't go bowling on Saturday; you went to dancing school."

A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR

Despite his early work in television, it was not until Walken was a teenager that he landed his first stage role: "Best Foot Forward," an off-Broadway musical starring Liza Minnelli.

Walken said that the current role turned out to be one of the most pleasant of his career. And the name of his character, Max Shreck, is actually an "in" joke by Tim Burton, the film's director. Shreck was a German actor who starred as the first Dracula in F. W. Murnau's 1922 classic, "Nosferatu." "Max is absolutely out there," the actor said. "He makes no bones about his intentions. He's good to his family. He wears spats. I always wanted to wear spats." He smiles. Walken puts on his dark glasses and is about to leave the restaurant. He is starting a new film, "Scam," a comedy-drama with Lorraine Bracco, in Florida shortly.

But what seems to especially involve Walken is a one-act play about Elvis Presley that he wrote in the five months he was filming "Barman Returns." Walken is a longtime fan of Elvis, who he said "was very pure, but took this beautiful gift and dissolved into this toxic wasteland." Walken is calling the play "Milk Cow Boogie," after one of Elvis' songs, and he took the Elvis role in a recent reading of the play at Lincoln Center. "The theme is, Elvis is still with us," Walken said, "He's older. He's his own age. He's lost a lot of weight. He'a just been away. He's
